° FBIS' Joint Publications Research Service (JPRS) has started to receive translations on diskettes from translators participating in a pilot automation project. The translations on the diskettes are edited on and printed from a terminal, eliminating the need for retyping. The first diskette translations will appear in the JPRS USSR Reports this week. JPRS automation will not only drastically reduce the time between translation and publication, but will also make JPRS translations available to the Intelligence Community in machine-readable form. The pilot project is scheduled to run through February 1985.

[redacted] will serve as a discussant on the American Political Science Association panel on intelligence on 1 September. We have already received one of the papers by John Elliff of the SSCI; the other by Harry Ransom has not yet arrived, but the substance was revealed in an interview with Ransom in a Nashville paper. [redacted] promised that the CIA representative will not be drawn into a debate on intelligence policy, but rather will be allowed to critique those portions of the two papers that are appropriate for an intelligence professional.

[redacted] briefed a group of USIA officers on intelligence at USIA Headquarters. It was disturbing that the group appeared to believe the Soviet disinformation of the KAL shoot-down. While [redacted] apparently succeeded in persuading them of the true facts of the case, it is incredible that this group, as well as a previously briefed NSA group, should have succumbed to the Soviet disinformation campaign. These disbelievers must be a microcosm of a much larger body of disbelievers in the U.S. body public. I have told Bob Sims in the White House that the Public Affairs people there should take the initiative and do something to counter the Soviet propaganda. For example, ABC's 20/20 and other TV programs are scheduled to run West German and British programs which carry the Soviet disinformation line.
